ECQA Certified Accessibility Professionals – a growing community

Accessibility and Inclusion have become mega-trends in our societies, in particular in North America and in the European Union (EU).

All different, all equal: Equal access and opportunities for all are pillars of the European identity.

Increasingly also businesses understand that it is not about laws and anti-discrimination only, but about business opportunities: There is a growing market for products and services for people with all kinds of disabilities. In an aging society, this market is highly future-oriented and promising.

Inclusive Distance Learning requires skilled trainers who know what accessibility and inclusion means when it comes to training materials, learning platforms, training styles and the many different needs of people with and without disabilities.

The project IDE@: Implementing a Digital E-learning @lternative develops the Job role: ECQA Certified Trainer in Inclusive Distance Learning.

Join us and become part of this initiative.
